THE WIPE'S CHRISTMAN. BY PRODUCCARY. th, how can you speak so cross, Charley ? It but's hand, nor right? four woulden!! have tailed a year ago as you have done to alght. You wonder to see me all and cry, Like a haby waxed, you say, When you didn't know i wanted a gift, Nor think about the day. But I'm not like a buby, Charley, Crying for something fine; Only a loving woman, pained, Could shed such teses as mine.

For every Christmas time till now— And that is why I grieve— It was you that wanted to give, Charley, More than I to receive. And all I ever had from you I have carefully laid agide; From the first June rose you pulled for me, To the veil I wore as a oride. And I wouldn't have eared to-night, Cherley, How poor the gift or small, If you had only brought me something to show That you thought or me at all.

Or a ribbon for my hair; A pretty story of lovers true Or a book of pleasant voys But to be forgotten, Charley, 'The that that brings the tear; And just to think that I have been Your wife but a single year!
